81st AMU WINS LOAD CREW OF THE QUARTER COMPETITION

Base reserves parking lot for DFAC customers

The Mosel Dining Facility parking lot is reserved for dining-facility customers when the facility re-opens Feb. 1.

This policy is in effect to conserve as many of the 27 parking spaces as possible for Airmen eating at the facility.

"Lunchtimes are short, and sometimes Airmen do not have enough time to be looking for a parking spot," said Master Sgt. Jose Murilloferro, 52nd Force Support Squadron Food Service section chief. "We're trying to make the parking spaces available for them, so they take full advantage of their lunch hour."

The DFAC has been closed for renovations since July 2010. Sabers working near the lot may have parked there during this time-frame.

"Yes, this place has been closed for a year and a half, and people have gotten used to or accustomed to parking here, but the big thing is that it's here for the DFAC," said Staff Sgt. Daniel Bickford, 52nd Force Support Squadron Sustainment Flight shift leader. "It's not a parking lot for any other squadrons, because of the limited parking that we do have."

Saber Airmen have different options when it comes to the parking in the lot. The food-service staff encourages either walking or carpooling for groups of Airmen commuting from distant work centers.

"Reserving this for people who work further away from the facility gives them time to come here, get their meal, sit down and eat if they choose to," Bickford said.

Staff Sgt. Robert Land, 606th Air Control Squadron radio frequency transmitting systems craftsman, performs link management communication on a central control monitoring alarm terminal during a communications maintenance exercise here Jan. 18. Proper link management ensures a smooth transition off the satellite. The purpose of the exercise is to train squadron members in maintaining communication practices by establishing satellite communications and setting up a theater-deployable communications package. The 606th Air Control Squadron began a communications maintenance exercise here Jan. 16 lasting until Jan. 20.

The purpose of the exercise is to train new squadron members and refresh those returning from deployment in maintaining communication practices by establishing satellite communications and setting up a theater-deployable communications package.

This training strengthens the squadron's reach-back capabilities, which is the ability to provide basic communications services to all deployed ACS members and radar from different locations back to the operators controlling aircraft, said Staff Sgt. Thaddeus Kloss, 606th ACS communications planner.

"We're simulating an air-control configuration," Kloss said. "We're doing this to simulate what we do down range and practice potential deployment capabilities."

Members participating in this exercise set up radio frequencies and satellite communications. Setting up these tools makes phone and email communication possible.

CMSAF discusses top issues

JOINT BASE LANGLEY-EUSTIS, Va. -- Chief Master Sgt. of the Air Force James A. Roy addressed a capacity crowd of Airmen and civilians at the Langley Theater on Jan. 11, and covered a wide variety of key Air Force issues.

Roy spoke on topics such as training, force management programs and how the current budget will affect operations, and took questions from Airmen on promotion, mentorship, retirement and commissioning programs.

“Hopefully you’ve all had a chance to hear the new defense strategy. If you haven’t, I would challenge you to go and read it,” said Roy, offering his support for the president’s recent announcement that the military will refocus its efforts on the Asia-Pacific region and cyber warfare.

Roy said there are many changes coming to how the military operates at home and abroad, and how most of these changes are driven by the current budget constraints facing the entire nation, including the $487 billion cut to Defense spending over the next 10 years.

“Will that change the way we operate? You bet it will, but I like the way the Chief of Staff of the Air Force, General (Norton) Schwartz, says it, ‘You’ve got to understand that we are a $100 billion Air Force, and we are the best Air Force there is.’”

As always, Roy said his highest priority is taking care of the men and women who serve in the greatest Air Force the world has ever known.

“What I’m concerned about is what education, training and experiences would be taken away from you. I’ve got to make sure we continue to develop you in such a way that you are prepared for the future,” Roy said.

Because of the current financial issues facing the Air Force, Roy said only 45 percent of the budget for travel for Enlisted Professional Military Education is currently funded.

LIQUID OXYGEN KEEPS MISSION RUNNING

Airman 1st Class Kyle Coates, 52nd Logistics Readiness Squadron hydrant operator, and Staff Sgt. Celso Velez, NCO in charge of cryogenics, receives an odor sample of liquid oxygen during a daily inspection here Jan. 17. A quality check of odor of the liquid oxygen is done for every daily issue to make sure the oxygen is breathable. (U.S. Air Force photo / Senior Airman Christopher Toon)

OPERATORS KEEP CARGO ROLLING

Airmen from the 52nd Logistics Readiness Squadron Vehicle Operations Element use a forklift to drop off cargo at the 606th Air Control Squadron during a cargo movement here Jan. 13. The element supports the 52nd Fighter Wing and its tenant units by transporting cargo to and from squadrons on base, to include transient aircraft. These Airmen are responsible for getting aircrew and cargo to the aircraft, delivering mission critical parts and supplies to the base, providing vehicles to customers for official appointments and government-owned-vehicle licensing for the entire base.
