SecAF, CSAF discuss changes to active, reserve mix

Tech. Sgt. Richard A. Williams Jr. Air Force Public Affairs Agency

The Air Force's two top leaders discussed planned adjustments to the Air Force's active and reserve components during a congressional hearing in Washington March 14.

During testimony before the Senate Appropriations Committee's Subcommittee on Defense, Secretary of the Air Force Michael Donley and Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. Norton Schwartz said the new defense strategic guidance led the service to propose changes in its force structure as part of its fiscal 2013 budget request.

"Because force structure changes have a ripple effect on manpower needs, our budget proposal calls for a reduction of 9,900 Air Force military personnel," Donley said

By component, this amounts to reductions of 3,900 active-duty, 5,100 Air National Guard, and 900 Air Force Reserve personnel, he said.

"[Manpower and force structure] changes were prompted by the strategic guidance we received that asked us to reorient geographically...and recognizing that the overall size of the ground forces is going down," Donley said.

Air Force officials analyzed their fighter and mobility forces to develop the right balance between active and reserve component capabilities, he said.

Daylight saving time begins in Europe March 25 at 1 a.m. Set your clocks ahead one hour before you go to sleep Saturday night.

Airmen from the 52nd Logistics Readiness Squadron load barriers onto a transport vehicle during a barrier plan exercise here March 19. LRS Airmen placed barriers to test the base's ability to respond to an increased defensive posture. The exercise also included a mock car bomb explosion to test the wing's response to an emergency situation. This type of training prepares first responders to protect the base and U.S. government assets, and tests base members' responses to real-world emergency events. Library

Programs transform readers into leaders

Ellick Ruffin 52nd Force Support Squadron

The Spangdahlem Library recently underwent a carpet replacement project in February.

However, the carpet represents only one of the major changes we have made to the library in the past few months.

One major change was the reallocation and consolidation of the resources from the Bitburg Annex's Library to Spangdahlem's Library. This change let the staff send many of the library resources to an orphanage in Poland. Another benefit from the consolidation was we were able to bring more of our resources under one roof to allow us to operate with less manning. This means we can serve you better, even during these leaner times.

The library is now one of the most popular locations on base, seeing more than 500 people on average a day. The checkout selection now contains more than 30,000 items, including popular movies and series on DVD, more than 50 magazines, CLEP and DANTES study materials, music on CD, audiobooks on CD and MP3, board and electronic games, and hardcopy books for all ages. All it takes is a U.S. Air Forces in Europe library card.

Additional online resources like Mango Language database, Morningstar Financial Reports, CountryWatch, and Ebscohost and Infotrac online newspapers and magazines, are also available at http://www.usafelibraries.org and require only a library card to access. Library cardholders may also request books from any USAFE library simply by logging into same website.

The library staff also welcomes purchase suggestions and paper interlibrary loan requests for any materials our customers are seeking.

Computers with internet access are available, and you can print for only 10 cents per page. Wireless internet access is free and extends 25 feet from building. Faxing is $1 per page and photocopies are 10 cents per page.

The library is staffed by two professional librarians, a computer specialist, and both German and American library technicians, all of whom are happy to help with your information needs. The library staff offers a variety of programs, including a weekly toddler storytime every Thursday at 10:30 a.m., a monthly book group, online database classes bi-monthly, and individual or group introductory library classes as requested.

A new program funded by USAFE Libraries is the "Books on Demand" program. This program allows USAFE customers to request items that for one reason or another the Spangdahlem Library cannot procure.

New technologies at the library this year include a self-checkout station and a new study room ...
